To be sure there are as yet no easters on the dining room table, or on the bedstend in our room, but such would not have been the case if the castors had not have been mislaid. Only three of those belonging to our wardrobe have been put on and a tipsy effect is the result, ther surprising in so stately an from the library, and the refrigerator has migrated from the parlor, so that we are at last reaching that condition of order, tranquility and rural felicity of which we tranquinty and turni lenerty of which we have dreamed. We have accomplished nearly as much as we expected to do in the fortnight which has passed since our "flitting," as some people would say, although in my mind there is something unsubstantial connected with the word flit, that I fear I never shall learn to associate with the heavily inden turniture vans, bristling with chair and table legs and head and foot boards, that table legs into field and they cours, to toiling through clayer suburban streets. I think, by the way, that I do not like that word, suburban. I think it sounds better to say "we reside in the environs," than "we live in the suburbs." There is a vulgar sort of sound about suburbs, but every one cannot reside in the environs. Still these environing days have their drawbacks, just like any other ironing

After the terrible work of the actual After the terrible work of the actual moving was over and we had transferred our Cares and Penates from the dingy brick house in town to the very new looking ornamental cottage in the outskirts, with a fresh paint front, and I had dismissed my Hibernian hirelings with their chariots and palfreys, I believe sincerely that I felt a complete realization of that excellent Mr. Weister's definition of despair. I should make sure of this and go at once to look in his dictionary but that I cannot think what has gone with that book—as Aunt Hepig used to say—unless, indeed, it be at the bottom of the dry goods box, in which has also been packed Jane's best set of French China.

She says she will have that cistern scrubbed out and filled with clear water, just as soon as she gets a little time. That drst morning's breakfast would have been rather a dreary affair if Jane had not suggested that we should imaging. had not suggested that we should imagine been done.

Now, however, things are different, and frequently I amable to find an article which I may want, without first removing all the rest of our personal property.

Last night Jane even tried to have a little music, and unlocked the piano, for the first time since in has been here, but the instrument seemed to twang so that there was no pleasure in it, and we had to give up the harmonlous idea, while Jane impressed upon me the necessity of not forvetting to send out a tuner. We are not without music of another kind, however, for the locomotives which pass back and forth over the railway, whose promixity to the house was so delightfully spoken of in the advertisement which induced us to take the place, sere-nade us at all hours, and not only that, but as they pass around the curve, there is an incertain sort of tremble comes into our pansion, not at all unlike that dubious mansion, not at all unlike that duotous shudder which one so frequently feels aboard a screw propeller at sea. Indeed Jane says she had no idea that anything could be so much like a sea voyage, but that, I think, is partly because things in the house have been in such confusion, and partly, perhaps, because our new pring water has not quite sgreed with us, and the cistern water, in which we wash s not certainly devoid of a certain odor of

ige. We have a garden, too—half an acre of it. We shall take great delight in this when we get a little time. There is often a good deal that is rural in a garden. Up to yesterday nothing had been planted in our garden, but nature had done a good deal for us. The ground is new, having just been hauled here in carts a year ago, and headles we do not like in the hands.

The seed did not spread out evenly, but lay here and there in little straggling heaps. But I think it will grow up all right and smooth. The ground seems rather hard and compact, but the seeds I are so small that I suppose, with a little proper energy, they will get their roots into it. I bought a rake to loosen the I clay, but Jane showed me that its teeth were so long and the blades of grass are so short that it they started to grow, away down so far in the earth, only the tips would show above ground, and that would look, ridicalous. I have cut the top of the arbor in a castleated shape and painted it peagreen to atome for the lack of umbrageous follage, and Jane sits in it sometimes and waves her white kerchief at the trains as they go by, for she says: "Who knows but some poor, heart-sick wretch, lonely and miserable, perhaps on the verge of suicide."

Our fence is a rail one. At first I thought I should like to put up a hand-some one, but money is tight just now, even with the banks, and as Jane says, even with the banks, and as Jane says, nobody can expect us to have more money than the banks. And she says too that the rails give a sort of rural look 40 our place, while her drawing teacher at school told her explicitly that there are never any straight lines in nature, so our fence must be very natural looking indeed. This decided us—in conjunction with the lightness of the money market—to refrain tightness of the money market—to refrain from building a paling fence, tor we are great patrons of nature, Jane and I.
